

WHO WE ARE

Mission & Scope of Services

Established in 1990, InterWorks contributes to the mitigation of disaster impacts and improves the lives of people most affected by disasters and conflicts. This is achieved by providing customized training and consulting services that enhance the performance of staff and organizations working in disaster management, humanitarian assistance and development-related fields.

When you consult with InterWorks, you benefit from the experience and knowledge gained across a wide variety of organizations, in over 100 different countries. InterWorks consultants bring an objective outlook, a fresh perspective and a total commitment to your project.

Working Globally Since 1990

Since 1990, InterWorks has worked in over 100 countries developing training programs, designing and implementing training, conducting evaluations and assessments and facilitating planning meetings. InterWorks has collaborated in many field projects, supporting agencies with the design, implementation and evaluation of disaster preparedness, mitigation and response projects in virtually every region of the world. Refer to the complete list in "Where We've Been".

Workshops

InterWorks workshops are dynamic, interactive and emphasize practical application of theory and lessons learned from the field. We employ a variety of methods including simulations, role-plays, case studies, small group discussions, field exercises, mini-lectures, video feedback, peer feedback and self-assessment.

In addition to traditional workshops, InterWorks offers distance learning and e-learning products and services which allow participants to learn at their own pace and convenience. We also have designed blended learning programs that begin with a pre-workshop distance-learning phase, followed by a residential workshop and ending with an individualized post-workshop action learning project.

THE INTERWORKS ADVANTAGE

Exercises, Simulations & Drills

Disasters are generally infrequent events in most countries. Thus emergency plans and personnel are often untested. Disaster exercises and simulations can help disaster responders and relief workers test and evaluate their plans and their skills to determine whether they are adequately prepared when disaster strikes. These activities can identify potential challenges and training needs related to the coordination system, the equipment and the response personnel. Exercises and simulations can also be used to practice and perfect skills that are difficult to develop in classroom settings.

InterWorks has developed activities for a large number of clients, that range from table-top exercises for country-level disaster management teams to simulated regional refugee emergency displacements for emergency relief workers and field security exercises for humanitarian personnel.

WHO WE'VE WORKED WITH

The breadth of our 80+ clients with whom InterWorks has collaborated over the past 20 years illustrates our engagement with all types of members of the international humanitarian assistance and development community.

Broad Cultural & Linguistic Scope

Our vast experience has given us a comprehensive perspective on the differences and similarities among cultures, their learning styles and customary practices that often color how successful a learning program or training workshop might be. InterWorks consultants can work in English, French and Spanish and have offered simultaneously interpreted facilitation and presentations in workshops and meetings over the years. InterWorks has translated over 40 training modules from English to French, Spanish, Russian, Arabic and other languages.
